2017-01-16.CHOPODZIII: the system for biopsy preparation, embedding, and sectioning of surgical biopsies by robotic microdissection. There are significant disadvantages to the conventional sectioning methods of surgical specimens. Therefore, we have developed CHOPODZIII, an automated, microdissection system that is able to microdissect, embed, and cut specimens. It is an integrated system that is currently being designed, constructed, and validated for clinical use. CHOPODZIII consists of a master control that is able to move surgical specimens. The microdissection system is attached to the master control, allowing retrieval and dissection of specimens from their container and setting them onto the adhesive film at the master control. The film mounts the specimen and holds it in place, and the microdissection system then dissects the specimen. Specimens that are embedded are moved to a shearing, drilling, or sawing system, where they are sheared, cut, or sawed into sections.

CHOPODZIII has been used to dissect, embed, and cut 46 cases of various tissues, including liver, lung, kidney, pancreas, and thymus. The robotic microdissection system is capable of dissecting, embedding, and cutting soft tissue, medium-density tissue, and dense bone, with the exception of cement and metal. Frozen sections are also able to be obtained. CHOPODZIII is an integrated system that is being designed, constructed, and validated for clinical use.
