Whenever I see the words 'unknown pseudo-class', what are the possible reasons? A: Because the.foo notation is not part of CSS itself, so it's a pseudo-class. A: Pseudo-classes are used in :not selectors, among other places, to identify a set of elements that are not "normal" in the document. For example, *:not(.foo) { background: red; } selects all elements that are not.foo, which would include the one that has.foo as a descendant. A: Because its a pseudo-class. A pseudo-class is an unknown CSS attribute, and a pseudo-class does not have a property. You are probably looking for the pseudo-elements, which are actual elements, such as :first-child or :before, which can act similar to CSS attributes. Two-dozen mother penguins and their chicks at Sea World New Zealand in Wellington, New Zealand, March 25, 2016. (Photo: Olivia Batten/AFP via Getty Images) This week, penguins at the New Zealand Sea World have collectively formed a giant pro-Donald Trump sign, per multiple reports from New Zealand. After a female "penguin mom" lost her baby to a human, a crowd of fellow penguins formed a protective ring around the lonely mom, f30f4ceada
