Students and inexperienced photographers also use photo editing programs such as Adobe Photoshop Elements and Corel Paint Shop Pro. Modifying a preexisting image Many photographers start out with preexisting photos that they want to modify in some way. Or in some cases, a client has commissioned a photographer to create an image that needs to be modified because no one else can take the shot in the time frame. In that case, the photographer is required to work in Photoshop to quickly revise an image. Consider that most of these images were created with cameras that have limited resolutions that don't let you produce images that have the quality and look you want. If you're starting out, you need to have a decent camera that can record high-quality images. The most basic step to take to improve a preexisting image is to retouch an area of it so that the details are focused on a specific portion of the image. You can use one of the following tools to modify an image: Spot Healing Brush: Select a spot in the image that needs attention and click once to activate the tool. Then drag over the spot to highlight it; or click and drag outside the spot and drag it into the highlighted area to hide the original image. Press and hold the Ctrl (Control) key while pressing the A key to bring up the selection tools and make sure you're selecting the part of the image that needs to be modified. Release the keys to apply the modification to the selected area. See the earlier section "Using the Spot Healing Brush" for more on working with this tool. Fade Tool: Select the Fade tool from the Toolbox and click a point in the image, where you want to modify the image, and drag to select the area you want to fade. When you release the mouse button, the image fades smoothly from the white color you selected to the black color that the image's pixels are set to. You can adjust the opacity of the fading effect by pressing the Alt/Opt key and moving the cursor within the

SPIRITUAL CORRECTION Dear Friends, Sometimes you can feel to the core of your being that something is wrong, but you don't know what to do to fix it. The solution may be simple, but it just doesn't seem to be available. Maybe you need to change something in your life. Or change something in your mind. Or change something in your heart. That's what spiritual correction is about. Jesus told us to "Take my yoke upon you and learn from me, for I am gentle and humble in heart, and you will find rest for your souls. For my yoke is easy and my burden is light." (Matthew 11:29-30) He meant the yoke of the relationship with the Father and the Spirit, which is forgiving, humble, gentle, easy, and light. Like Jesus', it is about freedom. It is about recognizing that we all have a problem, which is sin, and it needs to be fixed. We have all sinned and come short of the glory of God. It's a terrible thing to realize that we have a problem. But that's true. Jesus said in John 8:7, "If he is the Son of God, he knows all things." The Bible says that God even knows what we will do in the future. That means He knows all things that are in us as well as all things that lie ahead. He knows our needs and our desires. That's why Jesus tells us in Matthew 25:31-46, "When the Son of Man comes, will he find faith on earth?" He also tells us, "But someone will say, 'You have been for so long in the desert eating wild fruits.' But let the one who chooses do what he wishes." (Matthew 3:4) He's saying that we can't just stop at correcting our sin. We need to continue to make ourselves right with God. He wants us to make ourselves right with Him. He knows that He has to be the One who changes us. Because we all know that Jesus said, "No one can come to me unless the Father has enabled him." (John 6:44) Jesus said, "The one who is not with me is against me, and to mount only what users wish to access as a separate volume. If local users wish to share data with each other, they may share separate folders on a home system. On the other hand, the data can be stored on an external storage, such as an external hard drive, and the data can be remotely mounted to a client computer. Alternatively, the data may be stored in a local hard drive, and the client computer can be connected to a remote storage location (e.g., a shared storage device). Moreover, a user can use folders and files on the external storage, such as an external hard drive, and the data can be remotely mounted to a client computer. Personal digital assistants (PDA) such as Apple's MacIntosh.TM. are known to have the capability to remotely mount to a client computer. However, users typically have various personal resources (e.g., address book, schedule, e-mail, etc.) which are stored on a personal computer. The user may also have personal preferences in how data is stored (e.g., data is stored locally versus remotely, data are stored in a folder structure, etc.). Thus, there is a need for a user to be able to access their resources remotely on a variety of different client computers. It is known that if the user grants remote access to his resources on a client computer, a virtual machine may be used to support the user. Such virtual machines typically are characterized by having a software layer between the client computer and the user. A virtual machine allows the user to have their own user environment on the client computer, but to access the user environment from an external network (e.g., the Internet). In particular, in such a virtual machine, the user environment may be virtually partitioned from the client computer such that the user can access the user environment remotely from the client computer, but cannot modify the software layer of the client computer. Although the personal resources are typically not accessible remotely in a virtual machine, the user may interact with the virtual machine remotely, such as through a client application, to access his resources. Such a virtual machine provides the user with a personal computing environment, but fails to provide the user with a personal computing environment that is optimized for a particular client computer. Specifically, the user may have different requirements on different client computers. For example, a user may use one client computer for all of his personal computing needs. However, the user may have various preferences and personal requirements as to how to best organize his data
