This invention relates to a device for mounting an automobile window to a window opening and more particularly to a device for easily securing a customised window to a vehicle window opening and to enable quick removal and replacement of the window. Automobile manufacturer's have gone to great lengths to provide for the automobile owner a wide variety of options with respect to the choice of vehicle and with the control of vehicle functions. Many of these available options relate to the manner in which the window functions. There are three different types of window, that being glass, laminated glass and polymer film or plastic. These can be referred to as a window, vehicle window and door window respectively. The simplest vehicle is the conventional large back driver's side window. Recently the window has been expanded in such a manner that the window is now much larger than the space available for the window, giving the appearance of several individual windows. Currently, the window must be mounted on the vehicle in a manner that enables the vehicle to be driven in this condition. This has many disadvantages. To remove the window means that either a special tool must be provided, an extra trip to the auto parts store required or both. Also the window is subjected to the same environment that it is exposed to while in use. The size of the window greatly affects the design of the vehicle. In particular, the appearance of the vehicle is limited by the position of the window. If the window is positioned far from the rear, rear view visibility is severely reduced. It is an object of the invention to provide a mounting device that enables a window to be mounted to a vehicle in a manner that enables the window to be removed and replaced
