No Parachute is an American documentary film by Michael Moore about the comic book character Superman. It was released on October 4, 2004 by Paramount Pictures and Michael Moore's group Infobase Entertainment. The film references events and characters from the 1930s to the 1970s, especially from the years of Superman's debut in 1938 until the Superfriends cartoon series debuted in the early 1980s, as well as other modern media events and productions. The film takes an overall critical stance, claiming that several TV writers want to spin off a new Superman into the media. It criticizes the attitude of the producers, who have every intention to begin a new Superman film franchise. The film premiered at the 2004 Sundance Film Festival. It was released in a handful of markets. A documentary on similar themes was never released, until Moore released Fahrenheit 9/11. Production Moore said he planned No Parachute when he started filming Live Free or Die hard. He told Nick von Thornhill, his associate producer: "I want to make a Superman movie. It's Superman and us." Content The DVD commentary track

Synopsis Part 1: 1938 to 1980 Starting in 1938, Moore traces the comic book character's development and how his presence became a cultural phenomenon. He shows how a "lost" Superman comic book page created the story of "truth and justice" and how Superboy appeared. Then Moore traces the history of the comics character with his "arrival," the radio series, TV show, film series, and how of all of Superman's movies, "Superman's Own" is one of the best loved. He ends the part by discussing how Superman is now at the "theological center of the culture," to which he gives examples such as having a beaded necklace with the "S" logo from Superman-themed College Medallions on the necklace; having a Superman weekly newspaper delivered to one's door; and having Superman newsletters delivered to one's door. He also praises Action Comics for using Superman as its main character. He says, "Superman didn't need to show up until 1939. We needed him. We needed it. And since 1939 we've never stopped." He asks viewers to refrain from liking Superman; because
