What is the difference between ${_someVariable} and $someVariable? Or is it the same? A: ${_someVariable} is a shortcut for ${someVariable? someVariable : 'default'} It's often used to make the code snipit for control expressions (if, else, etc) much more readable (someVariable? someVariable : 'default') Where as $someVariable is just used to refer to the variable. From the PHP manual: ${string} The string is interpolated and parsed according to the syntax rules. $variable The value of the variable named $variable is returned. A: ${} Escape the content, and remove brackets. $ Escape only the brackets, and return the enclosed string. A: $someVariable is just a string, but ${someVariable} is a string replaced by the value of someVariable if it exists, and by "some default value" if it doesn't. The name
