Due to the paucity of data on dengue in many areas, it is difficult to predict the future incidence of dengue. We estimate the expected number of dengue cases for a given day and compare our results to the actual incidence from two sites in Piti -Salp tri re, Paris, France. We consider 15 age groups and 6 dengue serotypes and take into account the effect of dengue virus serotypes, as well as seasonality. We first describe a relatively simple model considering the observed dengue counts from two sites in Paris. We then compare the predictions generated by the model to the actual incidence. Our results suggest that, for a given day, the expected number of dengue cases can be calculated up to a month in advance and that the model can be used to predict the future incidence of dengue for Paris.Q: Disable button after selected value is chosen I am selecting a value from a drop down list.
