The applications of immunomagnetic separation method followed by reverse hemolytic plaque assay to malaria parasite was conducted using study site of malaria endemic areas of District Bheri, District Sonitpur and District Sundargarh. The detection of Plasmodium vivax and Plasmodium falciparum by immunomagnetic separation method was recorded 100 per cent. The specificity of the immunomagnetic separation method was 97.5 per cent. The detection of P. vivax and P. falciparum was 100 per cent. There were recorded good results with the usage of this technique. Bone morphogenetic protein-2 serum levels in patients with peri-implantitis. The aim of this study was to explore the potential of bone morphogenetic proteins (BMPs) in the prevention and treatment of peri-implantitis. Serum levels of BMP-2 were measured at implant placement, at 1 month and at 1 year after insertion of the implant and were also compared with the clinical parameters of inflammation and bleeding. Serum levels of BMP-2 were significantly higher in patients with peri-implantitis than in healthy patients. Increased levels of BMP-2 were associated with gingival inflammation and bleeding. Elevated levels of BMP-2 may be associated with inflammation, and not directly with the response to the implant. Treatment of rheumatoid arthritis by intratympanic or intralesional administration of local anesthetics and corticosteroids. We investigated the local effects of lidocaine and corticosteroids injected into the middle ear in patients with rheumatoid arthritis (RA). A one-stage prospective crossover trial was performed. The middle ear was filled with 0.5 ml of a 2% lidocaine solution in 20 patients. In three patients, an injection of 0.5 ml corticosteroid suspension (triamcinolone hexacetonide, Kenalog) was performed using a needle in the middle ear. The middle ear was examined for ear pain, discharge, or the sensation of pressure. After one month, for the control of the efficacy
