Voltage-gated sodium channels and excitability disorders. Voltage-gated sodium (Na) channels are responsible for the rapid upstroke of the action potential in neural and muscle fibers. Mutations of these channels can cause neurological disorders, including migraine, epilepsy, myotonia, and cardiac arrhythmias. Various subtypes of these channels exist and are divided into nine genes, each encoding for a different channel subtype. They are distributed over many subcellular domains, from the axon initial segment to the calyx of Held and at the node of Ranvier. Several regulatory proteins including auxiliary subunits, internalizing proteins, and structural proteins also interact with and modulate Na channels. Furthermore, Na channels are also subjected to the phosphorylation cascade. Alterations in the function and localization of Na channels can result from mutations in these channels or of various interacting proteins. Although many of the Na channel mutations are still unknown, increasing numbers of disorders are identified. In this review, we focus on recent developments in the physiological characterization and functional analysis of Na channel mutations.

Blog How to Create a Healthy Lifestyle

When it comes to creating a healthy lifestyle, the following three things have helped me:

1. Keep it simple If you are tired of trying to eat healthier and just can’t figure out why, here is why: you overthink it. There’s a reason these three things have stayed with me – they are simple. When you think about each of them – the benefits and health benefits and how simple they are, you will realize that it’s not rocket science. Simple doesn’t have to mean plain. Simple can mean fresh. Simple can mean tasty. Simple is also effective.
2. Choose your quality over quantity. I’ve found that as long as I have a few things on my mind I am happy and satisfied. There have been times when I’ve gotten into the rut of I’m too tired, I’m too busy, I’m too busy, I’m too busy, etc. and I have to consciously pull myself out of it – because if you continue to do the same thing every day, you will only get more tired and more fed up with yourself, which I was. It’s difficult because usually you are so used to doing the same thing in the same way that that is what you do.

Abilene Becomes 1st City To Instate 'Stay-At-Home' Order

Abilene Mayor James Donley, right, and City Manager Marc McQueen, left, tell the crowd outside City Hall that they will enforce the order starting Monday, March 23, 2020, at 5 p.m. The mayor said that those who don't comply with the order could face a stiff fine up to $1,000.

Abilene's stay-at-home order takes effect Monday, March 23, 2020, at 5 p.m.

City Manager Marc McQueen says the ordinance is a “significant first step” in stopping the spread of COVID-19. “The city of Abilene is here to stay until April 3,” McQueen said. “In the meantime, we are here to help and protect residents.”

The mayor also announced that most of Abilene's essential businesses, including grocery stores, laundromats and movie theaters, are allowed to remain open. “As long as we have adequate space and the required personal protective equipment, we will allow all businesses to remain open,” Donley said.

Donley said the city will enforce the order starting Monday, March 23, 2020, at 5 p.m. “Those who don't comply will face a stiff fine up to $1,000,” the mayor said.

The mayor said the order will remain in effect until at least April 3.

The city commission voted 4-0 Tuesday night to implement the new order.

UPDATE: Here are some of the ways Abilene will enforce the stay-at-home order.

City workers also can:

- Revoke driver's licenses, ID cards, and vehicle registrations for those persons who fail to comply.
- Issue notarized receipts allowing them to receive refunds for activities and admissions for which they were charged.

Inform customers that Abilene businesses are asking for all electronic transactions be made by phone or phone and mail.

“All of us are on the same team,” McQueen said. “We have to work together to keep Abilene safe.”

City Manager McQueen says, “From this time forward, we’ll be asking everyone to wear a mask when they come in contact with others.
