Two solid-state sensors were developed, with the aim of detecting small amounts of bromide ion. In the first, a WO3-based structure was prepared for the transduction of changes in conductivity that accompany the corrosion of metal electrodes. This sensor can be used in the detection of bromide ions directly, but its use is restricted to fixed-potential or potentiometric systems. We have also developed a bromide ion-specific second-order J-aggregate fluorescence sensor, based on the interaction of a fluorescent sensor with bromide ion 6d1f23a050
