Machine translation is a tool for automating the process of translation from one language to another. It can be used for both professional and educational purposes. Common examples include machine translation from one human language to another, In computer science, a bytecode is a method of representing binary executable computer programs or binary compiled programming language sources, in the form of abstract machine instructions. Bytecode is most common in dynamically typed programming languages, where it can be used for both run-time efficiency and static source-code analysis. To describe the musculoskeletal radiographic findings in client-owned diabetic dogs and cats and to determine whether diabetic dogs and cats have similar or different musculoskeletal radiographic abnormalities. Clinical records of 91 client-owned diabetic dogs and 44 client-owned diabetic cats were reviewed. Signalment, physical examination findings, diet, diabetes mellitus onset, severity, duration of diabetes, and treatment were recorded. Radiographic images were reviewed for the presence of abnormalities such as fracture, luxation, chondrolysis, osteoarthritis, joint laxity, osteoporosis, osteochondrosis, degenerative joint disease, joint swelling, and soft tissue swelling. Descriptive statistics were generated for the most common skeletal abnormalities detected by radiography. A generalized mixed-effects model and generalized mixed-effects model for repeated measures were applied to determine whether there were significant differences between cats and dogs for the presence of any abnormality. There was no difference in the presence of any musculoskeletal abnormality in diabetic dogs (8 of 91 [8.8%]) and diabetic cats (4 of 44 [9.1%]) (odds ratio = 0.90, 95% confidence interval = 0.26 to 3.09, P =.88). Luxation was the most common finding in diabetic cats, and chondrolysis was the most common finding in diabetic dogs. There were no significant differences in the occurrence of any musculoskeletal abnormality in diabetic dogs and diabetic cats. The specific radiographic findings differed between diabetic cats and diabetic dogs, with diurnal hypertension the most common reason for the finding of chondrolysis in diabetic dogs.
