The Expression of Emotion. The different expressions of emotion range from the low and subtle to the high and overt. Such basic expressions of emotion include laughter, smiling, snarling, sneering, grimacing, gaping, and displaying various other facial muscles. These basic expressions are accompanied by a special range of emotions that we call the basic emotions. There are a number of theories concerning the nature and origin of the basic emotions, but they all agree that the basic emotions are basic in nature and that the appearance of each emotion is accompanied by a unique facial expression. If you want to get an insight into the body language of nonverbal communication, which is said to be the most significant part of social communication, try to take a look at the interpretation of the body expressions as taught by Daniel Goleman in his book. When using the book, you will not only be able to understand expressions more easily, but you will also be able to use them to get the point across. Along with the expression of emotion and nonverbal communication, body language also plays an important role in other aspects of human communication. For example, it can make it easier to determine the feeling of another person if the body language of that person is available for interpretation. The best approach to analyzing body language, however, is to pay attention to the actual expressions of emotion that the body is showing. The quality of such an analysis will be based on the accuracy of the expressions of emotion that the body is showing. By making sure that the expressions of emotion are as natural as possible, you can make sure that the analysis of such expressions is as effective as possible. Let us look at some of the more basic expressions of emotion. The face itself is the most obvious part of the body that can be used as a means of expression. If a person is happy, then there will be a certain expression of happiness on the face. Similarly, if a person is sad, then there will be a sad expression on the face. As long as we know the difference between the happy and sad faces, then we can understand the difference between the emotions of a person who is happy and a person who is sad. Happy In this example, you can see a
